CAMELLIAS

The Camellia is one of the most decorative of all the ever-green shrubs for its foliage alone. Its graceful habit of growth adapts itself to many types of culture, making it one of the most useful plants we can use in the garden. Its season of bloom comes at a time when every flower is anticipated with pleasure.

Because of their almost ethereal beauty, many people have been a little timid about trying their hand at growing Camellias. Or perhaps you may have tried to grow them without finding out just a little about their likes and dislikes. Stop being afraid of them. Follow the few simple rules outlined below and you'll find them as easy to grow as sunflowers.

They may be grown in containers or out in the open ground. Select a partially shaded area, and if the soil is heavy, provide drainage for your plants by placing a generous supply of coarse gravel in the bottom of the hole before planting.

While they will grow in any good, reasonably light soil, they will do much better if planted in a mixture of one-fourth each of the following: Imported peat, leafmold, top soil and sandy loam.

Feed your plants regularly every 60 days during the growing season with Bandini Acid Food, Camellia Better Gro or any good plant food suitable for acid loving plants.

Keep your plants on the acid side with occasional treatment of soil sulphur, as they do best in a soil where the Ph is around 5.5 to 6.5. Do not feed for three weeks after applying acid treatment.

Keep your plants well watered at all times, but do not give them so much water that the soil becomes soggy. Above all, do not fuss over your Camellias, give them reasonable care, but do not kill them with kindness.

We offer with our 1948-49 Camellia list our 1-year-old in 3-inch pots: Standard varieties at 59c each, choice varieties 89c each. A collection of 2-year-old plants in 1-gallon containers 98c each. Large field grown specimens appropriately priced.

ADOLPH AUDUSSON. Large red semi-double. Form resembles Grandiflora Rosea. One of this variety took the Pasadena Camellia Flower Show First Prize this year for the finest individual bloom. Upright, compact grower. Blooms midseason. 2 year grafts $5.00.
